Jail Work Report - 1999

Executive Summary

Value to Washington Communities

1999 marks the second edition of the Jail Work Report, a statewide summary of the work performed by offenders housed in city and county jails in Washington. In many cases, work done by offenders in lieu of incarceration was also reported. Twenty-three city jails provided information, including fourteen jurisdictions that gave detailed reports, up from eight jurisdictions reporting details the year before. Thirty-eight of the thirty-nine counties provided information. Total value returned to Washington communities in 1999 was

- 3.2 million labor hours
- $18.26 million value at minimum wage

Jail Work

Similar to last year, the majority of work, 71% of all hours reported, offset costs of incarceration in Washington jails. The essential services provided by inmate workers lowered operating costs and produced 2.25 million labor hours.

The most common jobs held by inmate workers were in

- food service
- laundry service
- janitorial work

Other common tasks included

- grounds maintenance
- building maintenance
- car washing

Examples of other cost-avoidance work included

- inmate uniform repair
- manufacture of inmate property bags
- commissary staffing

Work for Government Agencies

Diverse work was done for governmental agencies, reflecting the needs of a wide range of agency customers. In almost all cases, work for government agencies was performed by minimum-security offenders leaving the jail to work off-site, or by offenders working off community service hours in lieu of incarceration. In general, this work consisted of entry-level tasks learned with a minimum of training time. In total, 747,818 hours were contributed to government agencies, 23% of all labor hours. Police and sheriff's departments were common customers, as were courthouses, fairgrounds, and parks and recreation departments. The most common jobs were

Jail Work Report - 1999

- general labor
- janitorial services
- grounds maintenance
- car washing
- litter pickup
- fairgrounds maintenance

Community Organization Work

In 1999, over 200,000 labor hours went to not-for-profit community organizations. As with government agencies, most work for not-for-profit groups was done in the community. Senior centers, food banks, and community centers were the main beneficiaries of work, along with many other community customers. Common tasks included

- general labor
- maintenance
- staffing
- short term special projects

Some Good Ideas

While the 1999 report shows many common themes in inmate work, some jurisdictions did unique tasks that proved very worthwhile for their communities. Good examples of cost effective, resource-stretching services included

- appliance recycling - Cowlitz County
- bus washing - Skagit Transit
- erosion control - City of Kent
- historic railroad maintenance - City of Toppenish, Lewis County
- home care bed setup - Newport Hospice
- resale home maintenance - Spokane County
- Talking Books - Society for the Blind

Continued Efforts

Growth in jail industries programs remains constrained by lack of resources at the local level - space, staff, and dollars to invest in new programs remain scarce. Cities and counties continue to pursue opportunities to expand work opportunities for offenders through partnerships and by using their limited resources as efficiently as possible. The Jail Industries Board will support these efforts with technical assistance, by providing access to grant information, and seeking other innovative means to develop program resources.
